

Leon N. Moses (October 24, 1924 - October 12, 2013) came to Northwestern University in 1959. He held a joint appointment as a professor in the Department of Economics and as a faculty member in the Transportation Center until his retirement in 2005. He served as the Chair of the Department of Economics from 1970-72, and as Director of the Transportation Center from 1974-79.

His research work primarily focused on the economics of firm location and the critical role played by transportation services and transportation costs. In addition to his research, he was an award-winning teacher. He was particularly noted for his rigorous teaching of undergraduate intermediate microeconomics and encouraging undergraduates to undertake research projects as part of their economics training.

Rae A. Moses (May 30, 1935 - February 7, 2013) came to Northwestern University in 1966. She was a founding member of the Linguistics Department, and served as Assistant Dean for the College of Arts & Sciences from 1968-1976. She co-founded the Women's Studies Program in 1986 and was its Director until 1991. She also helped establish Northwestern's Organization of Women Faculty, and the Women's Studies Residential College, where she served as a faculty associate. She retired in 2004.

Her research interests were wide ranging and included child language development, how language was affected by feminism and other social changes, and how physicians communicate with their patients. Amiable, generous and kind, she was a creative and innovative educator and mentor to her students and colleagues.
